SEAN SMITH LECTURE/DEMONSTRATION /WORKSHOP
CUTTING & CARVING STONE, PLUS....
BARTLETT ARBORETUM - MARCH 11, 2006 AT 12 NOON

Before the general meeting, the Board of Directors will meet at 10:00 am. Interested members are welcome and can add their thoughts and opinions, but, of course, can not vote.

Mike Pollock contributed this report about Sean and the meeting: “Sean Smith, declared one of the best daiza carvers outside of Japan by Arishige Matsuura, Chairman, of the Japanese Suiseki Association, will be back to YAMA KI for an exciting and unique event.

We’ll be renting a stone saw to accompany Sean’s demo on cutting stones to release the potential in rocks that would otherwise have little value. Sean will demonstrate how to select a line to cut, the technique for using a small stone saw, and the finish work to refine it. Although an uncut stone is the ideal suiseki, many fine stones have been altered either by cutting or minor grinding of their bottom surfaces. It can be an almost magical moment when the bottom drops away and a suiseki is born. Don’t miss this meeting. Sean will try to allow us to cut any stones we bring. There are size limitations because of the saw blade we’ll be using. Stones with cuts of around six inches will probably be the maximum size we can cut that day.”

Sean lives in Maryville, Pennsylvania, where he owns and operates Custom Oriental Woodcraft. Exploiting his interest in bonsai and carpentry, Sean started his business making bonsai display stands and carving daiza . Visit his web site (<http://www.bonsai-suiseki.com>), for details on his impressive credentials as a bonsai master. You will also see samples of all of his products, e.g., stands, turntables, suiseki, shoji screens, etc. - all individually assembled one at a time. You can see his work at our meetings each month - Sean made the Yama Ki tokonoma last year.

The photos at the right were copied from his website as samples of his handcrafted traditional bonsai stands and suiseki mounted on daiza (custom carved shallow wooden base, unique for its suiseki), each with its own traditional custom wooden box.

FEBRUARY’S MEETING WITH MARTY SCHMALENBERG

Marty began the meeting remarking about his enjoyment driving along the Merritt Parkway to the meeting viewing and admiring the natural trees in their skeletal winter appearance. He then presented slides he has taken of trees in their natural state in front of buildings, in the woods, etc. that he admired for their trunk formation and graceful branching. He is constantly looking at the ramification of these trees and mentally pruning and cutting them. He feels that bonsai styling should follow natural growth.

He brought some of his bonsai and discussed their history and the reasoning used to determine their present styling. Interestingly, Marty does not grow bonsai in the ground - he uses big deep clay pots and wooden boxes.

Members were delighted with his styling insights on the “problem” trees they brought to the meeting. Most members asked that he proceed with the change of front, cutting and pruning. A few reserved judgement, noted his suggestions and waited to do the actual modifications at home. Throughout the session,. Marty emphasized that secondary branches should be naked until their tips - which should end in a graceful filigree. He also stated that moss should be used only when “showing”.

FEBRUARY'S TOKONOMA

Last meeting's tokonoma was again provided by Mike Pollock. The stone is named “white Dragon Gorge” and is a Furuya-ishi (a stone from the Furuya area of Japan). The stone is estimated to be a suiseki for over two hundred years; he is the fifth owner! Mike indicated that the daiza is probably a replacement and is about 150 years old. The name and previous owners' signatures appear on the kiri baku (Kiri wood box) lid. Mike added that Furuya stones are created in geologic formations called Karsts. The stones found in the Ligurian Alps of Italy are also Karst stones.

BACK TO BASICS WITH BERNI
Berni Gastrich

SPRING IS ALMOST HERE

Right now is a very excellent time to do major pruning. Trees are still dormant and there will be very little bleeding when you make cuts. Since dormancy will end very soon, there will be active healing in the very near future. If your tree has already broken dormancy do not make major cuts since the bleeding will be profuse. Minor trimming is okay.

For mature bonsai, feeding with low nitrogen fertilizer is fine as soon as they break dormancy. If you go heavy on the nitrogen now, you will get a rush of growth, with long internodes. For pre-bonsai, where growth and thickness are the objective, more nitrogen is fine.

As you know, the ideal time for repotting is when the buds begin to swell. These swollen buds indicate that the root tips are also about to initiate growth. If you root prune at this point, the healing and new growth in the roots will start very quickly. My crabapples and some maples are already at this stage. Once you have root pruned, do not let these trees experience extreme cold again. This is the season when carrying trees in and out each day may be unavoidable. If you are lazy about this, you're taking a significant risk.

I will again bring small packets of mycorrhizza to the next meeting. They will be available at approximately my cost.
